An Independent Register Shopping News story last Wednesday, March 29, incorrectly reported the volume of manure spilled into backwaters of Allen Creek in a March 17

Wisconsin Department of Natural Resources staff reported last Wednesday that only 3,000 to 4,000 gallons of manure – not 300,000 to 400,000 – was involved in the spill at Larson Acres.

"It was a very small spill, not 300,000 gallons," said DNR Waste Water Engineer Mark Cain by phone to the Independent Register last Wednesday, correcting the newspa-

The Independent Register contacted the DNR after receiving several public reports and inquiries regarding a spill on Allen Creek. The newspaper sent a list of eight questions to the DNR staff contact for the southern region, Michael Schmoller, listed on the DNR website.

Cain responded for the department by phone to the questions. The Independent Register and the correspondent apologize for the misunderstanding and printed error.

Questions put to Schmoller intended to, "inform the public in an objective way and allay public concerns about the water, property, and health," in response to the public inquiries.

"Larson Acres has had no spills in recent years; they've really done a good job," Cain said in the original story about the spill.

The spill occurred when a line feeding into a large lagoon plugged up, and manure overflowed a cement transfer point to the containment. An employee of Larson Acres spotted the spill and acted immediately.

They did exactly what we want farms to do in this instance. They stopped the spill, cleaned up what they could, and reported it to us," Cain said in the original newspaper

Larson Acres is licensed to milk 2,800 dairy cows in a concentrated animal feeding operation at the junction of Highways 59 and 104. Cain could recall no spills at Larson Acres since a 30,000-gallon spill from a failed hose clamp occurred on Oct. 20, 2002.

Allen Creek flows west from Larson Acres above Bump Road toward the Sugar River, where it enters the river above Albany.

Manure spill east of Albany was 3,000 – not 300,000 gallons Allen Creek," Cain said in the original newspaper story, stating that the DNR was taking samples in the area but did not think there was any reason for concern for health down-

> Cain said some fish did die in the backwaters of the creek and that some waste did enter the creek. Employees of the dairy raised a dike around the spilled manure and pumped what did not enter the water into containment.

Juda marks 50 years since tragic plane crash

By Ryan Broege CORRESPONDENT

"We were only 16, 17, 18 years old, and we went through hell," said Keith Rothenbuehler, his voice

Rothenbuehler is a member of the Juda High School's class of 1967 forever marred by tragedy on March 30, 1967. Fifty years later to the day, nearly 50 community members, along with Juda students, congregated at the Juda High gymnasium to memorialize the "Nine Angels," the young women killed in a fiery plane crash at a New Orleans Hilton while the students were on their senior class trip.

The service was brief but poignant, opening with an observed moment of silence for the victims. They lifted their eyes, many already moistened, to the center of the gymnasium, where the senior class gathered around a flowery placard bearing the victims' names. Each name was read aloud, and a purple balloon was walked to an exit to be released into the cold, rainy spring day.

Rothenbuehler fished a Polaroid out of his back pocket. "It was taken right before the crash," he said.

In the picture, he was naked but for his underwear, locking a classmate's arm in a playful wrestling hold. Outside his second-story room, a DC-8 jet cartwheeled through two homes and fell to a scorching heap on the other side of the hotel, releasing a torrent of fuel that flooded the hotel's first floor and sparked an inferno near his

Rothenbuehler burst from his room in his underwear and raced for the hotel's lone exit. Halfway down, he realized he could not sidestep the flames in just his underwear, so he doubled back for

Rothenbuehler remembered that once he arrived to the relative safety of the parking lot, explosions ripped through the cars in the parking lot in front of the hotel.

The next morning, the Catholic Diocese bought everyone a new pair of shoes and set of clothes. "We were offered a free flight, but nobody wanted anything to do with

The group boarded the City of New Orleans train line for home.

"When we were younger, there were no counselors" said Janice Matzke, class of 1967, in a particularly matter-of-fact fashion mirrored by at least two other members of the Class of 1967. "We just had to deal. It was hard."

Matzke keeps four books of news clippings, letters, and tokens of support she received from around the world when she returned

The healing is still underway, 50 years removed, Matzke said. "When we have reunions now, new things always come up, and people are opening up now."

The turning point was the 25th class reunion, when the class parted with its previous approach of not directly addressing the tragedy.

Rothenbuehler remembers the reunion well. The group was before the gravesites of the last two victims, buried in Monroe. "We laid the flowers, stepped back, and we all just bawled," he said, his voice cracking. "It hurt then, and it hurts right now."

After the reunion, the class went to a classmate's house and "talked for hours, about everything," Rothenbuehler said. "That cleaned

"I'm glad I did come (to the said Sandra Grossen, service),' Class of 1967. The tragedy forged extremely tight bonds among the surviving members of the Class of 1967, she said. "We're all like brothers and sisters now."

Grossen said the service broke open the floodgates she had built around her memories of the crash. "You have twinges of remorse, but (at the service) all those feelings flood back like it was all yester-

Both performances are at 1:30 p.m. at Zion Church, located at N2350 Church Street, Juda.

Directed by Shelly Jordan, the beginning of the musical finds John the Baptist (played by Rudy Kaderly) declaring that he is one voice crying in the wilderness, "Prepare ye the way of the Lord." The play continues by tracing the story of two of the most pivotal figures in the hours following Jesus' death, Joseph of Arimethea (played by Danny Pollock) who provided the tomb, and Nicodemus (played by Bob Severson Jr.), the man who helped carry Jesus' body. Together, they took Christ from the cross, prepared the body for burial, and entombed him. In this simple act, they told the world that they, too,

Village of Orfordville to auction excess equipment

CORRESPONDENT

The Orfordville Village Board gathered for a regular meeting on Monday, March 27, at the Orfordville Village Hall. Some of the topics covered included auctioning surplus village equipment and updating the Spring Street project.

Jason Knox explained to the board that he requested a friend do a live Facebook feed of the last meeting because he was out of state and couldn't attend. Knox's friend was denied when she mentioned the idea to president David Olsen. Olsen explained that he refused because he does not want to be recorded live and would prefer that people attend meetings in person.

Board member Beth Schmidt explained that she would like the village to be portrayed positively. Schmidt mentioned that the denial was posted on another Facebook page, which in her mind, portrayed the village negatively.

Board member Dale Peterson and Eggleston both fear that the live feed could be edited and not be

Clerk Sherri Waege will consult the League of Municipalities to find whether the statutes allow live feeds on social media.

Dale Peterson explained that he spoke with Sunrise Auction, Wanless Auction, and Bill Perkins regarding an auction of village equipment. Peterson told the board that he felt that Wanless Auction was the best option. Wanless charges 15 percent for items that sell for less than $2,000.00 and 10 percent for items that sell for over $2,000.00. Peterson also mentioned that Wanless would charge a minimum advertising fee. Wanless will advertise the items as industrial rather than residential, which will result in more interest. Peterson told the board that Wanless could do the auction the week after Easter. Peterson suggested that the village host an open house the week before, Monday through Wednesday from 6 p.m. to 8 p.m. The motion carried for Wanless Auction to conduct the auction for the surplus vil-

Karl Stuvengen gave an update on the Spring Street project. He told the village board that a possible start time on the project is the middle of May. The estimated cost of the project is $16,000 to Stuvengen also told the board that the project must be done, and all the paper work filed by June 30 for Orfordville to get the $4,500 grant from the state. Stuvengen added that the LRIP (Local Road Improved Program) grant could only be used for materials and not labor expenses for repairs to East Spring Street.

The board approved Dianne Myhre's fence easement 6-0.

The motion carried to grant an Operator's License to expire June 30, 2017, to Courtney McIntyre.

The motion carried to grant Kerry Knutson, of Knute's Bar and Grill, permission to have outside consumption for his annual anniversary party on Friday, Aug. 25, and Saturday, Aug. 26, with outside music to end at 11 p.m.

The motion carried to approve the vouchers for the General Fund for $19,199.32.

The students entered to "Footloose." They performed a variety of Broadway songs that they helped to choose. Songs included: "Tomorrow" and "Hard Knock Life" from Annie; "My New Philosophy" from You're a Good Man Charlie Brown; "See You Again" from Furious 7; "The Schyuler Sisters" and "Guns and Ships" from Hamilton: An American Musical; "Cups" from Pitch Perfect and "Getcha Head in the Game" from High School Musical. They then added dance to the program with "Electric Slide/Boogie' and "Cupid Shuffle" and finished with the grand finale/sing along "We're all in this Together" from High School Musical. The words to the last song were in the programs so that the audience could sing along with the students. During the dance portion, some of the students remained on stage and danced, and the rest moved down to the floor, where the audience was invited to join them.

A healthy soil clod with earthworms and channels help to infiltrate water into the soil profile. Field day planned for April 13

Have you ever wondered what Clinic). Miller's session will start a worm's eye view looks like? On Thursday, April 13, you will have the chance to go into a soil pit to discover just how far cover crop roots have grown, what critters are making their home in the soil, and how the soil structure influences how much rain the soil can soak up.

The Green County Spring Cover Crop Field Day will be held in two locations and at two different times for participants' convenience.

The first location is at Jim, Jeff, and Jaimie McNeely's farm at W425 Elmer Road, Brooklyn, and will be from 9:30 until 11:30 a.m. It is located south of Brooklyn, just west of Highway 104.

The second site will be on Dennis Miller's farm west of Brodhead at W1176 Highway 11 & 81 (across from the Brodhead Vet at 1 and go until 3 p.m. Both sites had planted a variety of cover crops into winter wheat stubble last Au-

Francisco Arriaga, Assistant Professor from the UW-Madison Department of Soil Science, and Brian Hillers, an Area Resource Conservationist with the Natural Resources Conservation Service, will be helping describe what participants are seeing on and in the soil.

There will also be chance to check out how the cover crops did over the winter -- either killed or still green and growing.

The event will be held rain or

Local church helps shelter veterans from wars' storms

Aging veteran cycles following wars may be driving homeless trends down - for now. Yet stateline and national service needs for these veterans, whose numbers have run as high as one in three of all homeless men, are still great.

"Veteran homelessness is get-ting better," said Marcia Galvin, of Housing 4 Our Vets. "There were approximately 150,000 homeless veterans on any given night in 2011. It's now down to about 40,000.

"We typically see Vietnam and Gulf War era veterans; we don't typically see Iraq or Afghanistan war veterans yet, but within 5 to 10 years we expect to see more of them," Galvin said in a talk last month at Orfordville Lutheran Church.

Comprehensive services to help veterans deal with Post Traumatic Stress, get training and find work such as Housing 4 Our Vets provides - can curb homeless statistics,

Opening its doors to veterans in Wisconsin and portions of four neighboring states, the transitional housing program in the former Caravilla Nursing Home continues to expand. Rock Valley Community Programs developed a portion of the nursing home facility, which had 500 beds at one time, into 24 studio apartments for veterans.

Each unit can house two veterans, who can stay up to 24 months and get much assistance moving away from homeless before transitioning into permanent housing.

"Many need a comprehensive approach - recovering from substance abuse, mental health issues, jobs,' Galvin said. "We use a clinical model. We develop an individual plan to address each veteran's needs.

Marcia Galvin, Community Development Director of Housing 4 Our Vets, speaks last month to about a dozen members of Orfordville Lutheran Church, which is looking to a second year of helping veterans overcome homelessness.

"We have a new program we've been raising money for, in a vacant wing of the former nursing home we're remodeling. It will be an income-based wing with affordable housing for 22 units. The cost is about $850,000, and we have about 90 percent of that raised."

Housing 4 Our Vets has purchased and is remodeling with the help of veterans the former Ben Franklin Store in Janesville, converting the building into a clinic for the veterans. Veterans also operate a convenience store at the residential site and work to restore used-, donated furniture in a business called Full Circle Furniture on Riverside Drive near Highway Q in Beloit.

"We really can't do what we do without groups like this at Orfordville Lutheran," Galvin said. "We have a wish list of veterans' needs. We have a winter coat and boot activity. People donate sheets, hampers, household supplies."

The transitional housing program provides a computer room, laundry, weight room. Thanks to Frito Lay, the site also has a garden. Beloit-Janesville Express is contracted to provide bus service to the rural setting between Janesville and Beloit, and veterans also carpool to work and study at Blackhawk Technical College.

Orfordville Lutheran Church members are discussing prospects for providing a cookout for the veterans a second year. The activity last year was the church's way of participating in a synod volunteer service promotion called "God's work, our hands." The service project last year was held the Sunday after Labor Day.

APR 28 TEACH CHILDREN TO SAVE DAY

I had to chores around the house, and I was rewarded with an allowance that I could either spend or save. I would generally save up for something and then use that money when I needed to. At home we have a chart for our sons where depending on their behavior, they can earn a star every day. Once they have five stars, they get a dollar. They've learned to save up the money that they've earned to buy things that they want.
