School districts will see increase in per pupil spending

Governor designates $110 million in federal funds toward education throughout the state got news that they would see an additional $133.72 increase in per pupil funding from federal Coronavirus Relief Funds, amounting to $110 million in new, additional funding toward Wisconsin education.

"Our kids and schools have faced unprecedented challenges during the coronavirus pandemic—from distance learning to reducing class sizes, to spending money that had been budgeted for pencils on PPE,' Gov. Tony Evers stated in the Dec. 2 press release. "This $110 million investment is an opportunity for schools to invest directly into programming to help students both in and out of the classroom, allowing schools to hire additional educators and staff, provide more educational and extracurricular opportunities, invest

Last week school districts in mental health supports, buy art supplies or computers, or keep the lights on-whatever they need and, most importantly, whatever our kids need. I've always said what's best for our kids is what's best for our state, and these funds will go a long way toward helping ensure our kids get the services and resources they need to rebound and recover."

RCHS selected for national preservation program

The Rock County Historical Society (RCHS) is one of only a few institutions in the United States that has been selected to participate in the Collections Assessment for Preservation (CAP) program.

CAP helps museums to improve the care of their collections by providing support for a general conservation assessment of the museum's collections and buildings.

RCHS staff will work with a team of preservation professionals throughout 2023 to identify preventive conservation priorities.

The final assessment report will help the museum to prioritize its collections care efforts in the coming years.

"It is a tremendous honor to CAP grant," said Cara Kinzelgrant will enable RCHS to host world-class preservation professionals who will assess current collections management protocols, storage and display environments, and the architectural integrity of the Lincoln-Tallman House and the Archives and Preservation Center.'

Kinzelman, who was instrumental in RCHS receiving the CAP grant, said the preservation professionals' recommendations will form a roadmap for RCHS to follow in upcoming years.

"This project will help us to ensure that the priceless collections in our care are appropriately preserved for future generations," Kinzelman said. "The preservation professionals' recommendations will also serve as a high-value foundation for future efforts to secure additional grant funding to address identified needs. Participation in the CAP program is an important step in the professionalization of collections management at RCHS, and represents continued progress in the implementation of our strategic plan."

The CAP program is administered by the Foundation for Advancement in Conservation through a cooperative agreement with the Institute of Museum and Library Ser-

Reaching out, managing your mental health

Millions of people in the United States are affected by mental illness each year. The COVID-19 pandemic has had a significant impact on the mental health of people of all ages. One in five adults experience mental illness each year. One in six youth ages 6 to 17 years old experience a mental health disorder each year. Now, more than ever, it is critical to reduce the stigma around mental health struggles that often prevents individuals from seeking help. Each mental illness is different but common warning signs include:

- Confusion or problems concentrating and learning
- Extreme mood changes, including uncontrollable "highs"
- Inability to carry out daily activities or handle daily problems and stress

social activities

· Changes in sleeping or eating habits

Youth can also develop mental health issues and can show behavioral symptoms, such as:

- Changes in school performance
 - Excessive worry or
 - Hyperactive behavior • Frequent nightmares
- Frequent disobedience or
- aggression

Many face stressful situations that are overwhelming and cause strong emotions in adults and children. Here are some good coping skills to help one become more resilient:

- · Take breaks from watching, reading, or listening to news stories, including those on social media.
- Practice relaxation exercises, prayer or meditation.
- · Take vacations away from home and work.
- Get enough quality sleep and regular exercise.

It is important to remember that even the most resilient person can face a difficult time and to know when to ask for professional help. Don't be afraid to reach out if you or someone you know needs help. Learning more about resources, support and treatment is an important first step. Contact your health insurance provider about your coverage, and your primary care doctor or local mental health

The small teacher-to-child ratios can create a cycle that

For example, a center must have one teacher per four children younger than the age of 2. That keeps staffing costs high.

"But if our charges are too high, then families will not enroll and if we do not charge a higher rate, then we are not able to hire educated staff at a decent wage," she said. "I wish that there was some state funding to help childcare centers meet their

Child care matters

The first five years

Mental health has become a critical part of our medical knowledge in recent years. As increases in research are completed, we learn more of how mental health affects many domains of our physical health and overall wellness. However, there is still one area that many people neglect or are dismissive of, and that is infant and early childhood mental health. The lack of communication about how brains develop during these early years allows us to overlook the importance of mental wellness of our youngest. Yet, research demonstrates that these early years are the most impactful towards the future of that individual. The relationships and experiences a baby and toddler have, will have resounding impacts. No more thinking that just because the baby or young child won't remember an exposure to things like violence, neglect, or poverty does not mean it will not have long-term negative effects. Exposure to these adversities over time affects the chemical make-up of the brain. We see the results in adults with issues like being in constant stress (fight or flight), decreases in graduation rates, and poor interpersonal relationships.

Babies do not have a choice if they will grow up in poverty or experience trauma, but there is something we can do as a community to give our youngest a better opportunity for success in life. We can make sure that all of our youngest have access to quality early care programming with adults who are responsive and supportive of children's needs. Research shows that sometimes it only takes a baby or young child to have one quality relationship in their early years to buffer or to teach resilience to adversities. A quality relationship provides consistency, love, and safety. Our youngest and most vulnerable do not have a voice in this, so it is up to us as a community to ensure that we are doing everything we can to provide our children with opportunities to grow healthy.

Currently Green County along with United Way, was able to procure a grant to assist 13 programs in our area with access to a mental health therapist to support teachers and reduce expulsion rates of children in child care settings. This grant expires at the end of the year, we are hoping to be able to continue the program next year, given the benefits early childcare professionals and the children they serve receive. Brooke Skidmore is the director of The Growing Tree in New Glarus. This opinion piece is the second in a series about why child care matters, and is supported by the Green County Economic Development Corporation.

Columbian architect builds business, language skills at Blackhawk

STUDENT SPOTLIGHT

Already a talented ar-chitect, Vanessa Hernandez realized that she would need to improve her English language skills when she moved from Colombia to the United States.

Seeking out a program that would align with her needs, she discovered the English Language Learner program at Blackhawk Technical College.

"Although I started visiting different countries when I was young, the adventure of living here has been difficult for me," Vanessa said. "I had to adapt to a new language and different customs. That is why the BTC team, especially Professor Brianna Deering, has been fundamental in these processes to learn English and have more confidence in myself and my abilities.' The free (to state residents) Blackhawk ELL program provides classes for all levels of learners on BTC's campus, at the Beloit Public Library, and through the Beloit Even Start Family Literacy Program.

The Even Start program allows parents with small children to bring their children with them instead of adding the burden of finding childcare.

Vanessa said she is eager to start working in her chosen profession - architecture, and open an interior design business, doing commercial and residential remodeling with a concept that invites Property owner Randy Page was present to request a variance to allow an addition to his existing garage that would create a 2,244 square-foot detached garage.

The current village ordinance allows for 936 square feet for a detached garage.

Page told commissioners he has nearly five acres and would like to store his equipment inside. He currently farms tobacco, strawberries and cabbage. John and Leann Kratz, who own an adjoining property, spoke. Leann stated she is not opposed to the addition, according to the unofficial minutes, but questioned if Page would be acquiring more equipment to be stored on the property.

Page explained the purpose of the project is to move all of his outdoor storage inside.

Commissioner Terry Morris stated he was unopposed to the variance request, noting Page has nearly five acres to build on, and added that he would rather see outside storage contained.

Morris made the motion to recommend the Village Board approve the variance request as presented. The motion carried.

DNR now offering year-round campsite reservations

Winter campsites available at 20+ state parks and forests

The Wisconsin Department of Natural Resources recently announced yearround camping reservations are now available at more than 20 state parks and forests. Temperatures may be dropping, but that doesn't mean the end of camping for anyone looking for a winter ad-

With 100% reservable campsites, visitors can plan ahead and have peace of mind before hitting the road knowing that a site is waiting for them.

Campers will no longer find campsite self-registration envelopes at state properties. Instead, make reservations using the DNR's online camping reservation webpage or by calling 1-888-WIPARK.

Reservation service agents can assist by phone or online chat seven days a week from 9 a.m. to 5 p.m. Nov. 1 through Apr. 30 and 9 a.m. to 11 p.m. May 1 through Oct. 31.

Campers can also reserve a campsite on the same day as arrival by either doing it online before leaving your home or calling from a mobile phone while at the property. Same-day reservations will not be charged the additional $7.95 res-

Visitors will no longer need to use campsite self-registration envelopes to secure reservable campsites on-site. Self-registration envelopes for daily admission and annual pass purchases are

Not all campsites or campground roads are plowed in the winter. Look for a message while booking your campsite or contact the property for more information on property conditions.

Availability alerts

Visitors who have their eye on reservable campsites can now use the new Availability Alerts feature on the DNR's online camping reservation webpage to let them know if a site becomes avail-

Setting up alerts is simple:

- Go to the reservations webpage and locate the main campsite search feature
- · Select preferred location, dates, equipment and party size and hit
- Users will be taken to the webpage for the campsite location selected. In the upper right corner select the "Notify Me" button to set up an email alert for the campsite and dates entered;
- Once alerts are set up, an email will be sent when a campsite matching the search becomes available.

Although the campsite is available when the alert goes out, the alert does not guarantee a campsite reservation as reservations are on a first-come, firstserved basis. At this time, alerts cannot be sorted for specific features such as
